pain pills are derived from opiates, which are known for blocking the effects of pain that the brain would normally feel